- 6. It was necessary to say this clearly and unequivocally so that each individual could see the consequences of such a position. So long as the poison of Western propaganda still made itself felt in the minds of the people, just so long would all-German elections, the most important condition of reunification, be put off. Everyone could assist by making this situation clear to all their friends, relations and neighbors and by fighting all manifestations of Western propaganda. He who really wanted German unity would help in achieving it in this simple way.
- 7. He ended by pointing out to his hearers that the financial means which had been earmarked in the DDR for cultural and sporting purposes, including building, would now be used for financing the visits of West German delegations to the DDR, since such visits also served the better understanding between both parts of Germany and their ultimate reunification.
